About Dr. Nicole (continued)

Dr. Christian-Brathwaite's clinical focus is on delivery of mental health care to seriously ill children, adolescents, adults and families both locally and globally. She has traveled extensively and conducted research in Liberia and Ghana, West Africa, as well as Italy. Dr. Christian-Brathwaite has significant experience working with and treating individuals from diverse backgrounds. She has devoted a substantial amount of her medical career to educating the medical and lay community about disparities in mental health, creating cultural formulations, and confronting biases. Dr. Christian-Brathwaite has written about and provided training on Implicit Bias in Medicine and Behavioral Health Care. She specializes in working with educators and schools to reduce stigma, decrease expulsion and suspension rates and improve the overall education of children with mental health needs. Dr. Christian-Brathwaite provides expert consultation, assessment and strategic planning to organizations and hospitals around diversity, cultural humility and disparities. She regularly participates in radio, TV and news interviews and community events about mental health and wellness in African American and other communities.

Dr. Christian-Brathwaite was selected as a member of the inaugural class of the Women's Wellness through Equity and Leadership program, sponsored by the American Psychiatric Association and the American Physician's Foundation. She has given lectures throughout the country on topics such as "Adverse Childhood Experiences in the School Environment", "Prioritizing Self Care", "Anxiety in African American Communities", "Post-Partum Depression in Women of Color", "Implicit Bias in Schools", "Becoming Anti-racist: From Individual to Institutional Change", "Combating Racism in Medicine", "Trauma
